Meghan McCain has praised Donald Trump for refusing to stop calling COVID-19 'the Chinese virus' despite fierce accusations of racism.

The president has unapologetically used the term multiple times on Twitter over the past several days, drawing criticism from many people - including Chinese officials - who say the term is both inaccurate and deeply offensive to Asians.

McCain expressed her support for Trump on The View on Tuesday, saying that the term is 'effective'.

'I don't have a problem with people calling it whatever they want. It's a deadly virus that did originate in Wuhan,' the conservative co-host said during a heated debate

The View panel opened Tuesday's show by addressing Trump's defense of his nickname for COVID-19 - which he claims he uses as retaliation against Chinese officials his administration believes are spreading conspiracy theories that the strain was created by the US military.

Host Whoopi Goldberg, who was broadcasting from home as a precaution, said she didn't recall China ever making such accusations before guest host Dan Abrams noted: 'It's clear that some Chinese officials are definitely trying to send out this message.'

Abrams then warned that if 'many on the left get too focused' on the rhetoric 'Trump's going to win on this'.

'Do I think he should be calling it the Chinese virus? No,' he said.

Fellow guest host Sara Haines accused Trump of trying to 'politicize' the spiraling pandemic by using the term.

'This is a time to look at information, look at facts and data. By calling it the Chinese virus, that's politicizing the title. Call it COVID-19 and stay with fact,' she said.

Goldberg reminded that there's already been an increase in racial violence and abuse against Asian-Americans because the pandemic originated in China.

McCain then chimed in and said Trump's use of the term was warranted because the Chinese government had tried to suppress information about the outbreak before it reached a massive global scale.

'I don't have a problem with it, and I think China, had they acted right away, and we had more access to information, maybe it wouldn't have gotten to the place that it is,' she said.

'That doesn't mean that we should be, in any way, stereotyping,' she added.

Addressing Abrams, she said: 'I agree with you that I think if the left wants to focus on PC [politically correct] labeling this virus, it is a great way to get Trump re-elected.'

Goldberg interjected: 'We shouldn't be pointing fingers. People get targeted because people start calling it the Chinese virus.'

McCain responded by referencing her Twitter feed as proof that she isn't a 'proponent' of racial targeting before stating that she isn't going to 'let China off the hook'.

'There's a lot of anger about our reliance on the Chinese government right now, and our reliance on China in so many ways,' she said.

'And that messaging from President Trump and his messaging from the very beginning that we need to remove our trade from China is going to be very effective going into 2020.'

Both Goldberg and co-host Sunny Hostin then chimed in with counterarguments simultaneously, at which point McCain griped: 'I can't tell who is yelling at me first.'

'No one's yelling,' Goldberg replied. 'I'm just trying to make sure you can hear me. I'm simply saying it's the same thing as saying Mexicans and rapists are coming here to get Americans. It's the same thing.'

'And you know what? It was effective,' McCain shot back, before Goldberg had the last word on the topic.

'It was effective, but it's not correct, is the point,' she said. 'And if any Asian person who is getting hit as we've seen in the last few weeks because someone thinks that they are walking around with it, you can't -- as the person who's leading the country, you can't lead with that.'

Federal officials including the head of the US Centers of Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) have sought to reduce racist stigma surrounding COVID-19 by warning against referring to the strain in a way that links it with China, where the outbreak began in December in the city of Wuhan.

World Health Organization guidelines caution leaders to avoid naming a disease after a location because doing so can stigmatize an area or ethnic group.

Trump drew the ire of Chinese officials on Monday when he referred to COVID-19 as the 'Chinese virus' in a tweet.

'The United States will be powerfully supporting those industries, like Airlines and others, that are particularly affected by the Chinese Virus. We will be stronger than ever before!' he wrote.

Beijing responded early on Tuesday by demanding that 'the US side correct the mistake immediately and halt its groundless accusations'.

Trump then doubled down, tweeting Tuesday morning about New York's governor Andrew Cuomo - who has demanded the military are activated to build hospitals - that: 'Cuomo wants 'all states to be treated the same.'

'But all states aren't the same. Some are being hit hard by the Chinese Virus, some are being hit practically not at all.'

The president repeated the offensive moniker for coronavirus in another tweet on Tuesday

Hours later an Asian-American reporter for CBS News added fuel to the controversy when she accused a White House official of calling coronavirus the 'Kung Flu' right to her face.

Weijia Jiang, who was born in China and raised in West Virginia, shared the unsettling encounter on Twitter, writing: 'This morning a White House official referred to #Coronavirus as the "Kung-Flu" to my face.

'Makes me wonder what they're calling it behind my back.'

Dozens of social media users expressed outrage over the comment, charging that Trump is responsible for racist rhetoric surrounding coronavirus.

But a few people have spoken out in defense of Trump's nickname, including McCain and Fox News host Tucker Carlson, who addressed the backlash on his show Tucker Carlson Tonight on Tuesday.

'Today, NBC News sent a tweet suggesting the president's use of the phrase 'Chinese virus' was, quote, both inaccurate and harmful, in tying racist associations between the virus and those from China,' the host said.

'Another statement written by morons in our news media. How is it inaccurate to call a virus from China "Chinese?'"

'The president, to his credit, does not seem intimidated,' Carlson added before cutting to a clip of Trump dismissing criticisms at a press conference Tuesday afternoon.

In the clip a reporter is heard asking Trump whether he will continue to use the phrase despite having been told its offensive.

'Well, China was putting out information which was false, that our military gave this to them, which was false,' he responded.

'Rather than having an argument I said I have to call it where it came from. It came from China.'

Several other pro-Trump officials have come under fire for referring to the deadly strain as the 'Wuhan virus', including Secretary of State Mike Pompeo, Sen Tom Cotton (R - Oklahoma) and Congressman Paul Gosar (R - Arizona).

Pompeo accused China of spreading conspiracy theories that the virus was the creation of the US military.

Contrasting conspiracy theories charging that the virus was created by China as a tool for biological warfare have been aired in pro-Trump circles in the US.

Geng Shuang, a spokesperson from China's Ministry of Foreign Affairs, on Tuesday accused 'certain American politicians' of promoting stigmatization by connecting the novel coronavirus with China.

He did not name Trump specifically, but was believed to be responding to the president's tweet hours earlier, Chinese state news agency Xinhua reported.

'We express strong indignation and resolute opposition to this,' Geng said at a daily news briefing.

He stressed that the coronavirus outbreak had occurred in multiple places around the world and the urgent task was for the international community to join forces to curb the pandemic.

'The United States should mind its own business first, and then make constructive contributions to the international counter-epidemic collaboration and the maintenance of the global public health safety,' Geng said.

China later retaliated by announcing that Beijing would expel American journalists working for The New York Times, The Wall Street Journal and The Washington Post.

Trump responded to the snub by tripling down on the offending term in a string of tweets.

'For the people that are now out of work because of the important and necessary containment policies, for instance the shutting down of hotels, bars and restaurants, money will soon be coming to you. About an hour later he added: 'I will be having a news conference today to discuss very important news from the FDA concerning the Chinese Virus!'

In a third tweet he stated: 'I always treated the Chinese Virus very seriously, and have done a very good job from the beginning, including my very early decision to close the "borders" from China - against the wishes of almost all.
